Taken from a letter written by Geo. H. Isbert to his cousin Maggie Edwards of Ames. My great grandfather's name on the Isbert side was John Isbert.

He was, as quite a young man, connected with the English navy and deserted this navy and took up the fight of the Colonies and after the Revolutionary War settled in Fazewell County, Virginia. His wife's name was Taber. She died in Kentucky in about 1830. He was then about 80 yrs. old and married a young woman and went to Kansas and raised a family of boys. He lived to be over 100. I have talked with some of his boys, one of whom used to be mayor of Kansas City, Kansas. This is all I know about the different branches of my family.

Collins' History of Kentucky Vol. II.
Early History of Lexington, Ky.
Among the original settlers of Lexington, Ky., were two brothers Elijah and Josiah Collins. In Aug. 1780, Stephen, whose name appears among the earliest lot holders (page 172) then a resident of Bowman's Station when returning from the successful expedition of Gen. Geo. Rogers Clark against the Indian towns of old Chillicothe (three miles north of the present city of Xenia, Green County, Ohio) and Piqua stopped in Lexington and exchanged the horse he rode for a 3 acre lot of growing corn, a cow, a few hogs and some farming utensils. He also exchanged his cabin at Bowman's Station for one in Lexington into which he removed permanently in a few weeks. His bargain was considered a bad one, and his change of home dangerous for the capture on the 22nd of June previous, of Ruddle and Martin's stations on the waters of South Seeking, had left Bryan's Station and Martin's and Lexington the most exposed position in the country. Mr. Collins consoled himself with the remark that it was as well to die by the sword as by famine - the latter being threatened south of the Kentucky River, by the wild game having been hunted out or driven off.

Soon after, the young corn and pumpkins were available for food and as the corn grew hard the mortar and pestle turned it into hominy and meal for bread. The skins of deer and elk when dressed, furnished clothing; stretched on a frame with wooly side up, the buffalo hides made at once bed and bedstead, and no warmer covering could be desired than the hides reversed with wooly side down.

Shirts were made of the linen manufactured from the lint from the bark of the dead nettle stalk.

Bath County Court. Ky.

Josiah Collins died about 1847. In the census of pensioners of Revolutionary and Military service of 1840 published 1841, Josiah Collins age 83 was living with Silas Moore his son-in-law in Avinger ville, Bath Co. Kentucky.

Bohannon Collins born 1810 died July 25, 1848 and his wife Lydia Manley born Aug. 3, 1812 died Aug. 18, 1886, married Mar. 1830. The said Bohannon Collins was the son of Josiah Collins born May 2, 1757 died 1847.

I think Bohannon Collins was the father of Lucy Myre Collins Gilbert (Wife of Harry Gilbert (H.H.))
 He preached and farmed. Lost his mind, very religious and succeeded. Lydia Manley was Lucy Collins Gilbert's mother and is buried near Marshall Kentucky.

for an expedition against the Indians with whom they had battle at Chilliethes after returning from this expedition he continued on duty at the blockhouse until August 1, 1779.

. On Apr 1, 1780, he returned to said blockhouse and was on duty there until Sep. 1780, when he went to guard the fort at Bryan's Station. In October, 1780, he went out under Colonel Daniel Boone against the Indians. He was in battle at Bryan's Station Aug. 1782, On Nov. 1, 1782, he volunteered in Captain McConnel's Co. under Gen. George Rogers Clark and aided in destroying five Indian towns on the Miami River.

On Nov. 30, 1782 he left the service.

He was allowed a pension on his application executed May 13. 1833 while living in Bath Co. Kentucky. There is no data on file as to his family.

Respectfully

Washington Gardner
